Let's Start!

What's your opinion on this matter?

Learning Outcome

Accurately use important information about people's jobs and places of work in communicative situations.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can ask for and give opinions.
- I can compare things and people.

Ask your partner:

- How do you share your opinions?
- Is the way you share your opinions with your friends different than the way you share it with someone you don't know? How so?

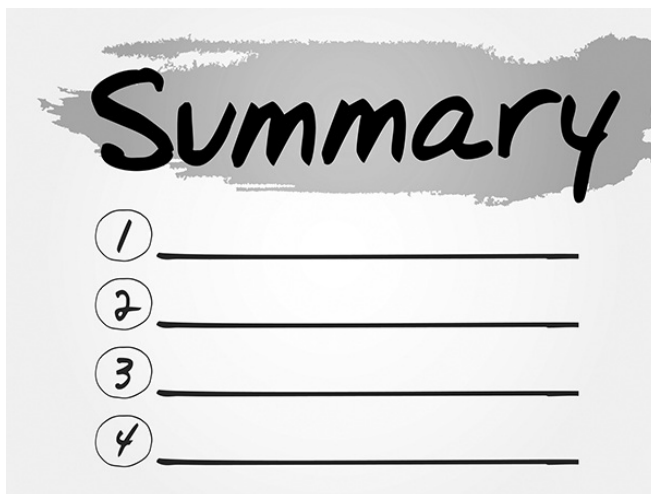

Let's Explore!

Miranda summarizes the SWOT analysis to Janet. Will Janet agree with it?

* To "summarize" means to give only the main information and not all the details of a report.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Janet: Thank you for coming in, Miranda. Do you have a summary prepared of Polygon's SWOT analysis?
- Miranda: Yes I do, Janet. I've made a copy in point form but I would like to review it with you and get some feedback.
- Janet: Certainly. Go ahead. What do you think about the analysis?
- Miranda: Personally, we have a lot of strengths and opportunities. Most of these lie in our strong marketing record and experience, partnerships, reputation and personalized service. As competition is fiercer than before, we have the opportunity to become the leader in the new and growing market of Latin America. I believe we are in a more strategic position than ever before. Where do you stand on this?
- Janet: To be honest, with your extensive experience in fashion, we are in a great position.
- Miranda: Thank you. As I mentioned yesterday, however, we have less cultural and marketing experience in Latin America than our competitor. They are also ahead of us in online retail. We need to know that the clothing line will appeal to South Americans and be found affordable. We cannot allow Farmani and Holly's to experience significant losses due to a lack of research. What do you reckon?
- Janet: In my view, it is an exciting opportunity. I agree that our position is indeed strategic for future expansion if we get our foot in the door of the Latin American market. We have great resources and potential.

Asking for and Giving Opinions

In the business world, it is common to give your opinion about things. However, it is advisable to ask another person about their thoughts on something before you tell them how you feel about something.

Here are some ways in which you can ask and give opinions:

Asking for Opinions	Giving Opinions
• What do you know about ... ? • What do you think of ... ? • What do you think about ... ? • How'd you feel (about ...)? • What'd you reckon (about ...)? • What's your opinion of ... ? • (What do think about) that? • Could you elaborate on that? • Where do you stand (on ...)?	I believe ... I reckon ... As far as I know, ... If you ask me, ... Personally, ... To my mind, ... The way I see it, ... To be honest / frank ... In my view, ...

Comparing Things and People

In English, it is common to describe things or people by talking about particular qualities or features that they have more of than someone or something. In order to do this, you need to use comparative adjectives. Adjectives are used to compare things.

Comparative Adjectives

The comparative is used to compare two people, places, ideas or things.

When comparing two things that are equal, we use the form as + adjective + as.

Example:

- We are just as experienced as our competitor.

When comparing two things that are different, we use the form adjective + -er than.

For two or more syllable adjectives, more/less + adjective + than.

Examples:

- Competition is fiercer than before in this market.
- Our competitor has more cultural and marketing experience.
- We are in a more strategic position than before.

Sometimes the comparison is implicit (you compare to something which is understood but not mentioned in the sentence).

Example:

- They are ahead of us in terms of retail experience.
